Introducing the Premier Issue of Courts, Health Science & The Law...

Taking Medical Malpractice Out of the Courts

Guest Editors:
Judith Areen, J.D.
Dean, Georgetown University Law Center

John Griffith, M.D.
Executive Vice President for Health Sciences, Georgetown University

Seymour Perry, M.D.
Chairman, Department of Family & Community Medicine, Georgetown University Medical Center

This ground-breaking premier issue of Courts, Health Science & The Law assesses organized medicine’s bold proposal to take medical malpractice out of the courts. Emerging from an evaluation undertaken by Georgetown University, the papers and published workshop probe virtually every point of view—from plaintiffs’ and defense counsel to health care providers and insurers to state medical boards.

“Medical malpractice is a curse. It taints the noblest traditions of the healing arts. It demeans doctors, hospitals, patients, laboratories, and medical industries of all kinds. It creates a litigation industry, one estimated by the U.S. General Accounting Office to have accounted for $2.2 billion in physicians’ annual policy premiums by the mid-1980s, a 20-fold increase in as many years dating from the mid-1960s. It discourages talented medical school applicants and, at least in some medical specialties, drives out practitioners, especially from rural and economically deprived areas and communities.”

—Seymour Perry, M.D.
